

falling outside MINUGUA's current mandate, the Secretary-General recommended that it be authorized, on an exceptional basis, to verify all those measures within its capabilities. In addition, the Secretary-General believed that verification of measures related to the agreement on the definitive ceasefire would be required, involving the deployment of UN military personnel.

In a 17 December report [S/1996/1045], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the agreement on the definitive ceasefire had been signed on 4 December in Oslo, Norway, and was scheduled to come into force, like other agreements in the overall peace package, upon the signing of the final agreement on 29 December. Subject to the Council's approval, the agreement would then require, within a short time, an increase in MINUGUA's strength, through the addition for a three-month period of a military component to verify its implementation. In his report, the Secretary-General presented to the Council detailed recommendations, based on the findings of a technical survey team of the Secretariat which had visited Guatemala, regarding the organization and strength of the proposed military component and on how it should undertake the responsibilities entrusted to it under the ceasefire agreement.

In later addenda [S/1996/1045/Add.1,2] to his report, dated 23 and 30 December, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace was signed on 29 December in Guatemala City, and requested authorization for deploying a military component of 155 military observers. The cost of the military component was estimated at $3.4 million for three months.
